

Card Sorting

Out of all the cards created, I have created a format for my website based on my analysis. The two main sections that will contribute to most my website will be my information and the games that I have made. Since the website will be relatively simple in the amount of information given, the website should not be fill with needless clutter. Even though there are numerous pages that fill become my website, the bulk of my websites information can be conveyed on the first page. The user should be able to scroll down and look at images of the games I've made and see at a glance the projects I have worked on. An image can convey more information than simply describing how good a game is and whether it's worth the time to see further. Obviously, there will be information about the games below, but people tend to be more on the move and not always give time to text as they do with images or video.

The people who would visit my website will first want to know about me. They would like to know my experience and how suited I am for a potential job. The first thing my website will show is a brief description of who I am and what I do. For those who do not know who I am should at least get a brief picture of who I am to see at a glance if I am a candidate or not. Employers need to know specific information very quickly and to present very basic information like my work on the first page is important. The second most important part is a way to contact me if they do feel I can be a candidate. This will be found on either the navigation or right below the initial information. This is for those who read my initial information and their eyes naturally lead them to ways of contacting me.

To reiterate, the first page will have a brief description of myself talking about who I am and what I do. Below that initial text will be images and descriptions of the games I have made to give context to my claims. This will also help make it so that the user doesn't have to go back and forth between games and information. The games themselves will have a download link below them if the user is so inclined. At the top, there will be a navigation as usual that will bring the user to either the whole list of games, my full information, and how to contact me.
